

Ipomoea sagittifolia

Ipomoea sagittifolia is a species of morning glory in the genus Ipomoea.^{[2][1]} It is native to Africa, India, the Malay Archipelago, and Australia. It was erroneously reported to occur in Taiwan.^[1]

It is used in traditional Indian medicine because its seeds contains the indole alkaloids ipobscurine A, B, and C.^[3]

This Solanales article is a stub. You can help Wikipedia by expanding it.

